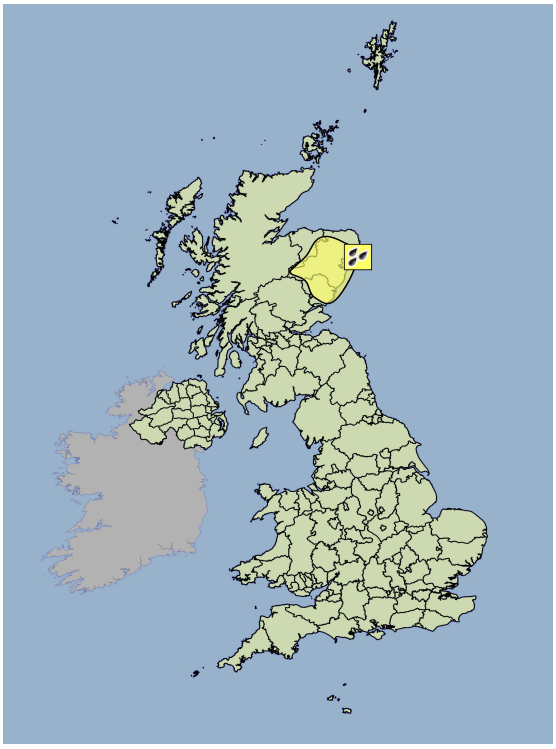
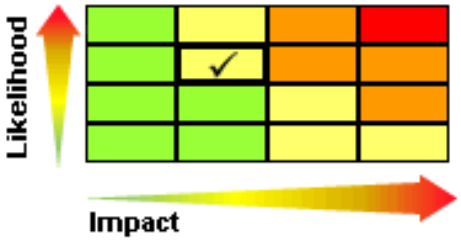
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Showers are turning heavier across Northeast Scotland, with some slow moving downpours giving the chance of 15mm in an hour and 25mm within a few hours. As is often the case in showery situations, some areas will escape the worst of these. The showers will start to lose their intensity in the evening, though residual surface water may affect a few routes for a few hours longer.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 14:40 on Sun, 21st Jun 2015 until 20:00 on Sun, 21st Jun 2015

Heavy and possibly thundery showers will affect much of Northeast Scotland for the rest of Sunday afternoon, slowly easing this evening. Some local downpours will lead to some difficult driving conditions due to standing water and spray and there is a risk of localised minor surface water flooding. The public should be aware of the risk of some minor travel disruption.
